Woollies Wonders

ON Feb. 1, four black college students came and sat in at an all-white lunch counter and did not get served. The four black youths — Franklin McCain, Joseph McNeil, Ezell Blair Jr. and David Richmond, all still teenagers and all freshmen on academic scholarships at N.C. A & T State University. Some whites did not like it, but the black people loved it. So that's why they came back again. The four blacks wanted to get equal rights and be able to eat at any restaurant they wanted to. Some whites were against integration because they wanted the races to be separated. The blacks got stronger. They kept bringing more and more friends. The kids got involved; that's what made it a success. The black people came out with a victory. The blacks got to eat at the same lunch counter with the whites. The whole thing was a big success. Was this right? Here are some views from both sides. We interviewed a white customer, Mr W.H. Smith. "I thought it was disgraceful. A dirty Nigger sitting our segregated area specifically kept clean for us whites." We then interviewed a black customer Mr L. Lomax. "I am ever so proud of these four young men. They are role models for the future youths of the black community. I hope these peaceful protests will carry on until we have our rightful victory."

David Richmond, Franklin McCain, Ezell Blair, Joseph McNeil, are seen sitting in the whites only Woolworth store on February 1, this year.

Is this right?

Is this new form of action important? Was it right to stop segregation? We will try to answer these questions.

This form of action is unpopular among the whites they think it is wrong. They are outraged because they can't do anything about it apart from attacking the blacks. The police don't do anything about the attacks. The blacks keep on coming back to take their places. If they are arrested, one group goes and another group takes their place.

Warmoth T. Gibbs

A&T president of the school at the moment. The mayor has asked him to keep the students on campus. Gibbs replied, "We teach our students how to think, not what to think." well said Mr Gibbs!
